I Am Here To Love

February 3 – 22, 2023

An exhibition of works by Shihori Yamamoto

Opening Reception: Friday, February 3, 6-8pm

NARS Project Space

Shihori Yamamoto's work stems from studies in psychology, biology, and physics. She investigates themes of "memory and body" and "nature and human". Her practice is a means of self-analysis, a documentation of her relationship with the surroundings, and a therapeutic process for exorcism and survival.

This exhibition consists of the artist's recent painting series reflecting on ongoing worldwide tensions against COVID-19 pandemic and warfare. The artist created the surfaces by layering Japanese rice paper with watercolor paints and pigments. Each layer represents the memories we have accumulated in the past. One could be bright, the other could be dark. The history of those memories is somewhat visible and somewhat very hidden from the surface currently exposed. The final layer does not have one flat color, depicting the fluidity of emotions exist in our bodies. The images on the surface are reminiscent of our inner body, deep ocean, and cosmic environment, where we all came from.

“When people get aggressive, it’s usually because they are scared. Dogs do that. Cats do that. All animals do that, and that’s the nature of living beings. The important aspect to analyze is why they feel threatened. Most of the time, the threat is associated with the physical and/or psychological pains they have experienced in the past. Instead of responding to the aggressions with hostility, I would like to help people to untangle the emotional chaos, and help them realize I am not harmful to them. I am the same living being on this planet. At the end of the day, I am here to love.” - Shihori Yamamoto

Through this exhibition, Yamamoto aims to unite the audiences by displaying equality between living beings on this planet, promoting mutual understandings and peace at large.
